IRInfo Convention 2008

For those of you that were unable to attend this year’s IRINFO Convention in Orlando, I would like to tell you about some of the highlights you missed. This is the second year NORMI has had a booth and participated as a vendor at the conference. It was flattering to be welcomed from major equipment manufacturers and other vendors that remembered us from IRINFO 2007. In addition to being a vendor, NORMI was privileged to provide a QST (Qualified Sampling Technician) training class for an audience of international thermographers. Also in attendance were several High Level Master Managers from EcoQuest. The response we got from the course attendees was overwhelming.

Lance, Jonathan, & Della hard at work!

During the banquet dinner, two of our NORMI Members (John Keller & Wayne Crider) received the Level One Thermographer Certification. It was impressive watching them receive IR credentials in front of an international audience. Just at our table alone and the table behind us were attendees from Ireland, the UK, Taiwan, and the West Indies. I should also mention that many of the international guests attended the NORMI QST Training.

NORMI and Infraspection Institute, the host for IRINFO 2008, have a tremendous synergy in paralleling industries. The convention gave both entities the ability to complement each other’s philosophy, training, membership, and goals. All in all, a good fit.

Did I mention we also had a good time? Yes, while attending six mini-courses, vendor meetings, banquets, road trips, and a host of other activities, we managed to meet many NORMI Members that we have only spoken to previously by phone or ONLINE Support. It was nice being able to put a name to a face.

Infraspection Institute has already started planning IRINFO 2009. As it looks right now, NORMI will be attending for a third year. We are not sure of the dates at this point, but I would keep your calendars open for some time in January 2009. We will be updating you as information becomes available. You can also get additional information and highlights at www.IRINFO.org and www.infraspection.com.
