CE	TUESDAY NIGHT—LIVE in the NORMI Talking Studio...616.712.8000 x 988162#
7-9pmEST	The Importance of Multiple Sampling Methods What different lab reports are available and how should I use them??

This training has been specifically designed to instruct you on the technologies involved in cleaning air indoors. Traditionally, the indoor air quality industry was built around filtration and, although filtration is a very important part of the process, it is not the silver bullet or magic wand that can solve every IAQ problem.

Once you understand that indoor air quality is a complicated problem, it is easy to understand the solutions because a multi-faceted problem requires a multi-strategic solution.

What business are you in? If you sell indoor air quality products and services you better be trained on assessing indoor environments.

Are you? Consider this—indoor air quality or, more importantly, poor indoor air quality is a problem that plagues millions of Americans today. Multiple surveys conducted by professional contracting associations, medical organizations, and IAQ groups estimate that over 50% of homes and businesses in the US have poor indoor air quality but not yet assessed.

“In many cases, probably upwards to 80% or more of the homes we are in, an IAQ/Mold Inspection is performed and remediation is unnecessary. Sanitization is less expensive, less invasive, and less destructive to the home/office.

Once the Certified Inspector determines the extent of the IAQ/Mold problems, he may legitimately suggest this protocol and assist his client in expediting the solution. By partnering with the homeowner to establish a lifestyle that substantially reduces the possibility of mold.”
